C. Rose Dahl is an American storyteller. She grew up in a small college town in southeastern Michigan. After she graduated from Purdue University, she moved to the east coast. She currently lives in Newark, Delaware with her two children. She has a Master of Science in Secondary Education from the University of Pennsylvania and earned an MFA in Writing Popular Fiction from Seton Hill University. An enthusiastic solo traveler, she enjoys summers on the road, seeing sights like the clear blue waters of La Playa Ocean Park in San Juan, Puerto Rico. She watches Big Ten college football in the fall and every spring during March Madness she cheers on the Boilermakers.

Dahl fell in love with romance novels at an early age. Her experiences living in Philadelphia where she worked as a high school Spanish teacher inspired her to write her debut novel, Love, Rebooted. Full of witty dialog and self-reflection, not to mention steamy sex scenes, it offers readers an opportunity to revel in the types of conversations often discussed between girlfriends over half-priced drinks at the end of a long work week. Love, Rebooted reimagines Black femininity and sexuality.

An African American writer, Dahl makes a point to feature diverse characters. She also tackles tough topics like intra-racism within the Black community. Check her out on social media for more information about current and future projects.
